

This work of art depicts 26 current and former Jewish baseball players and nine Jewish baseball executives, sportscasters and entertainers with baseball ties, including the Diamondbacks CEO Derrick Hall, second from left in front row of stands, and Sandy Koufax, front and center, Dodgers number 32. To order this litho: visit JewishBaseballPlayer.com or call 847-924-6140. Courtesy Greg Harris or Arizona Diamondbacks President and CEO Derrick Hall, Judaism and baseball go together like America and apple pie.

“As a people, we’re about bringing people together and bettering our community, which is what the Diamondbacks are about as well, which is why it’s such a perfect fit for me,” says Derrick. “If we can serve our community and make it a better place to live, we are doing our job. We can put smiles on faces – that’s the beauty of the industry we are in.”

Jointly, Derrick and the Diamondbacks have been working together to improve their community since Derrick joined the club in May 2005 as senior vice president of communications. He was named president in September 2006 and added the title of CEO in January 2009. Now 44, he is one of the youngest major league presidents. As a team, the Diamondbacks have given Arizona plenty to smile about. They

“We take pride in being the most fan-friendly team in sports.”
 – Josh Rawitch,
 Diamondbacks senior VP